PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Petitioner, Fort Stewart Association of Educators, respectfully petitions for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit.

OPINIONS BELOW

The unreported decisions of the Court of Appeals and the District Court are reproduced in the Appendix filed herewith (App.) at 1a and 3a.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The Court of Appeals entered its judgment on May 30, 1996. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

STATUTES INVOLVED

The pertinent provision of Title VII of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, as amended, 5 U.S.C. §§ 7101 et seq. (Chapter 71 of Title 5) is set forth below:

§ 7121. Grievance procedures

* * * *

(e)(1) Matters covered under sections 4303 and 7512 of this title which also fall within the coverage of the negotiated grievance procedure may, in the discretion of the aggrieved employee, be raised either under the appellate procedures of section

7701 of this title or under the negotiated grievance procedure, but not both. Similar matters which arise under other personnel systems applicable to employees covered by this chapter may, in the discretion of the aggrieved employee, be raised either under the appellate procedures, if any, applicable to those matters, or under the negotiated grievance procedure, but not both.

The pertinent provision of 20 U.S.C. § 241,[1] as amended, is set forth below:

> § 241. Necessary arrangements by Secretary; standard of education
> (a) In the case of children who reside on Federal property-
> (2) if it is the judgement of the Secretary, after consultation with the appropriate State educational agency, that no local education agency is able to provide suitable free public education for such > children, the Secretary shall make such arrangements . . . as may be necessary to provide free public education for such children. . . . For the purpose of providing such comparable education, personnel may be employed and the compensation, tenure leave, hours of work, and other incidents of employment relationship may be fixed without regard to the Civil Service Act and rules and the following: (1) chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of Title 5; (2) subchapter I of chapter 63 of Title 5; (3) sections 5504, 5541 to 5549, and 6161 of Title 5; (4) sections 1302(b), (c), 2108, 3305(b), 3306(a)(2), 3308 to 3318, 3319(b), 3320, 3351, 3363, 3364, 3501 to 3504, 7511, 7412, and 7701 of Title 5; and (5) chapter 43 of Title 5.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The Fort Stewart Association of Educators (FSAE) is the exclusive representative of the professional and non-professional employees of the Fort Stewart Dependents Schools, Department of Defense Domestic Dependent Elementary and Secondary Schools (FSDS).[2] FSAE was certified as the exclusive representative of this bargaining unit on December 12, 1983, by the Federal Labor Relations Authority (Case No. 4 RO-40002). At all times since certification, FSAE has been the exclusive representative of the bargaining unit members at the FSDS.

Pursuant to Chapter 71 of Title 5, United States Code, FSDS and FSAE entered into a series of collective bargaining agreements. The current collective bargaining agreement was entered into on May 30, 1991, and became binding on the parties on June 29, 1991. On June 29, 1994, the collective bargaining agreement was renewed for one year. As required by 5 U.S.C. §§ 7121(a)(1) and (b)(3)(C) the parties' collective bargaining agreement contained a procedure for the settlement of grievances and the right to arbitrable review of any unsettled grievances.

On August 25, 1993, Ms. Judy Johnson, art teacher and member of the FSAE bargaining unit, was removed from her teaching responsibilities and reassigned. Shortly thereafter, on September 27, 1993, FSDS issued Ms. Johnson a written memorandum which terminated her employment, for cause, effective September 29, 1993. FSAE filed Association Grievances on behalf of Ms. Johnson as to both of these personnel actions. When the grievances were not resolved through the grievance procedure, FSAE timely invoked the arbitration provision of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The grievances were heard by Arbitrator Joseph A. Weston, the arbitrator jointly selected by FSDS and the FSAE.

A hearing was held over the two grievances on June 13 and 14, 1994. Thereafter, Arbitrator Weston, on August 8, 1994, issued an opinion and award which held that Federal law precluded him from adjudicating the merits of the grievances. Rather, Arbitrator Weston erroneously determined that the Civil Service Reform Act, Pub. L. 95-454, 92 Stat. 1111 et seq. (codified throughout various sections of 5 U.S.C.), as applied by this Court in United States v. Fausto, 484 U.S. 439 (1988), precluded petitioner's bargaining unit members from arbitrating adverse personnel actions.

Citing 5 U.S.C. § 7121(e)(1), FSDS argued before the arbitrator that employees hired pursuant to 20 U.S.C. § 241 were non-preference eligible excepted service (NEES) employees without appeal rights to the Merit Systems Protection Board and therefore without a right to arbitrable review of adverse actions through the negotiated grievance procedure. FSDS further argued that these employees were not in an "other personnel system" as the term is used in 5 U.S.C. § 7121(e) and (f) and, therefore, without a right to arbitrable review of adverse actions under the second sentence of 5 U.S.C. § 7121(e)(1). Arbitrator Weston held that "[b]ecause of her status [Ms. Johnson] is not entitled by law to have her grievances be subjected to arbitrable review under the provisions of the negotiated grievance procedure in the collective bargaining agreement."

Following the arbitrator's refusal to issue a decision on the merits, FSAE filed the instant judicial action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Georgia. FSAE sought a decision in the form of a declaration that employees hired pursuant to 20 U.S.C. § 241 are in an "other personnel system" as the terms is used in 5 U.S.C. § 7121(e) and (f). FSAE also requested a declaration that the parties collective bargaining agreement which provided for arbitrable review of adverse actions was binding on FSDS. Finally, FSAE requested mandamus relief pursuant to 28 U.S.C.§ 1361 asking the district court to order FSDS to abide by the terms and conditions of the collective bargaining agreement.[3]

On January 20, 1995, the FSDS filed a Motion to Dismiss on the basis that the district court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over the complaint. Following responsive pleading and without a hearing, the district court granted the motion to dismiss on February 24, 1995.

Relying on a misunderstanding of the nature of petitioner's judicial action, the District Court also applied the Fausto decision and held that it lacked subject matter jurisdiction over the claim. In the order granting FSDS' motion, the district court stated that "[i]f Johnson was a NEES employee

[3] FSAE had also asked for mandamus relief asking the Court to order the arbitrator to issue a decision on the merits of the underlying grievances. As was pointed out in the government's opposition brief below, mandamus can only lie against a government employee which the arbitrator is not.

employed pursuant to an other personnel system, then she may have been entitled to arbitration but she has no statutory right under the CSRA to judicial review of that decision." (App. 8a). Herein lies the crux of this petition. The district court misunderstood the nature of the complaint by assuming that FSAE was seeking review of an arbitrator's decision. After reviewing the appeal procedures outlined in 5 U.S.C. § 7121(f) for review of arbitrator decisions, the Court held that no right to review existed.

FSAE, however, was not seeking judicial review of the arbitrator's opinion and award. The arbitrator did not issue a decision on the merits of the grievance for which review might be sought. FSAE instead sought a determination and a declaration from the district court that employees hired pursuant to 20 U.S.C. § 241 are in an "other personnel system" and the terms of the collective bargaining agreement -- which expressly includes the right to arbitrable review of adverse actions -- are binding on the parties. FSAE also sought mandamus relief from the district court in the form of an order to FSDS to abide by the terms and conditions of the collective bargaining agreement that it signed.

On appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit affirmed the decision of the district court without opinion. (App. 3a).

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

The Court should grant the writ in order to clarify the earlier ruling in United States v. Fausto, 484 U.S. 439 (1988). The opinion in Fausto states that Federal civil service employees whose employment is governed by the Civil Service Reform Act (CSRA) may not seek and obtain judicial review of adverse personnel actions above and beyond the review which Congress chose to provide within the CSRA. Clarification is needed, however, because the lower Federal Courts (and many federal agencies, acting as employers) have read the Fausto decision as holding that any and all Federal employees, whether covered by the civil service personnel system or not, are precluded from obtaining third party review of their employment claims unless the CSRA expressly provides for such review.

Additionally, this Court should grant the writ because Federal District Courts should know that, unless subject matter jurisdiction is clearly precluded, they have judicial power to interpret

Federal statutes and inform disputing parties of their respective rights under the statute(s). In the instant case, petitioner was possessed of a non-lawyer arbitrator erroneously performing the quintessential judicial function of statutory construction. To compound the situation, none of the administrative adjudicative agencies which implement third party review procedures within the CSRA have jurisdiction to address adverse personnel actions involving "other personnel systems". See 5 U.S.C. § 7121(f). Therefore, petitioner properly took its legal claim of a statutory entitlement to Federal court. Because review is not otherwise precluded, the District Court below possessed subject matter jurisdiction to hear and adjudicate that claim.

Finally, Petitioner's judicial complaint below is not inconsistent with this Court's decision in Fausto. That decision held that the comprehensive civil service personnel system contained within the CSRA, which does not provide judicial review of adverse personnel actions to a category of federal employees covered by the CSRA personnel system, provided regular civil service employees with all of their rights to third party review. Petitioner does not seek to challenge or alter the Court's holding in Fausto. Rather, it is the position of the FSAE that Fausto is simply not applicable to the case at hand. The case at hand involves the statutory rights of employees not employed pursuant to the civil service personnel system contained in the majority of the CSRA, but instead are employed under a personnel system operating separate and apart from the CSRA personnel system, i.e., an "other personnel system" as that phrase is used in 5 U.S.C. § 7121 (e) and (f). The Writ should be granted because this Court and only this Court can clarify the applicability of the CSRA and the decision in Fausto to employees employed pursuant to a personnel system other than the one contained in the CSRA. This Court should ensure that these employees are not deprived of their statutory rights to arbitral review of adverse actions.

I.

The Holding in Fausto has no Application to Federal Employees Employed in an Other Personnel System and Therefore May Not Properly be Used to Deny Statutory Rights.

In Fausto, this Court examined the comprehensive CSRA personnel system and concluded that Congress intended to deny judicial review of adverse personnel actions to non-preference eligible excepted service employees because it had not included those employees within the categories of employees who were entitled to such judicial review. At issue, however, were the rights of a civil service employee whose employment was governed by Title 5 of the U.S. Code and the implementing regulations of the Office of Personnel Management. The instant case is legally different because the employees represented by Petitioner are employed > without regard to the Civil Service Act and rules and the following: (1) chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of Title 5; (2) subchapter I of chapter 63 of Title 5; (3) sections 5504, 5541 to 5549, and 6161 of Title 5; (4) sections 1302(b), (c), 2108, 3305(b), 3306(a)(2), 3308 to 3318, 3319(b), 3320, 3351, 3363, 3364, 3501 to 3504, 7511, 7412, and 7701 of Title 5; and (5) chapter 43 of Title 5.

20 U.S.C. § 241(a)(2).

This case is further different from Fausto because petitioner was not seeking judicial review of the merits of the adverse personnel action. In Fausto, the civil service employee was asking the courts to examine the adverse personnel action in order to determine whether it was lawful. This action, by contrast, seeks to have an arbitrator examine the adverse action affecting Ms. Johnson and for him to determine whether the action was permitted by the applicable collective bargaining agreement. In order to effect this ultimate relief, the legal rights of the parties under the applicable statutes need to be judicially determined. Providing such a judicial determination, however, does not constitute judicial review of either the propriety of the underlying adverse action or the arbitrator's decision adjudicating the underlying action.

II.

The Holding in Fausto Did Not Divest District Courts of Their Authority to Address Federal Questions Concerning the Rights of Federal Employees Employed under Other Personnel Systems.

In Fausto, the Court held that when there is an elaborate statutory scheme which provides for judicial review of adverse personnel actions in certain circumstances, the Court will not assume that additional avenues of judicial review exist. As explained above, however, Petitioner was not seeking judicial review of the underlying adverse personnel action. Rather, Petitioner sought a declaration that employees hired pursuant to 20 U.S.C. § 241 are in an "other personnel system" as the terms is used in 5 U.S.C. §§ 7121(e) and (f). FSAE also requested a declaration that the parties collective bargaining agreement which provided for arbitrable review of adverse actions was binding on FSDS. Further, FSAE requested mandamus relief pursuant to 28 U.S.C.§ 1361, asking the district court to order FSDS to abide by the terms and conditions of the collective bargaining agreement.

The District Court had subject matter jurisdiction over this complaint under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. That statute provides that "[t]he district courts shall have original jurisdiction of all civil actions arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States." Id. This civil action arose under Chapter 71 of title 5. The plaintiff, FSAE, asked the District Court to find that the terms of the collective bargaining agreement entered into under authority of Chapter 71 of Title 5, are binding on the respondent.

The District Court also had subject matter jurisdiction under 5 U.S.C. § 702 which provides that "[an association] suffering legal wrong or adversely affected or aggrieved by an agency action within the meaning of a relevant statute, is entitled to judicial review thereof." Petitioner, FSAE, was the exclusive representative of the bargaining unit members employed by the respondent, FSDS, and was a party to a collective bargaining agreement entered into with FSDS. As such, FSAE was adversely affected by the actions of FSDS.

The District Court also had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1361. "The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any action in the nature of mandamus to compel an officer or employee of the United States or any agency thereof to perform a duty owed to the plaintiff." Id. FSAE sought an order from the District Court requiring FSDS to comply with the terms contained in their collective bargaining agreement.

III.

As a Matter of Law, Petitioner Is Entitled to the Relief Sought Before the District Court.

Petitioner entered into a collective bargaining agreement with Respondent under the authority of Chapter 71 of Title 5. That chapter requires that "any collective bargaining agreement shall provide procedures for the settlement of grievances . . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 7121(a). In addition, the statute provides that > any negotiated grievance procedure . . . shall . . . provide that any grievance not satisfactorily settled under the negotiated grievance procedure shall be subject to binding arbitration....

5 U.S.C. § 7121(b). In compliance with 5 U.S.C. § 7121(a) and (b), the collective bargaining agreement contained an article which established the right to file a grievance and, at the election of FSAE or FSDS, to have that grievance resolved by binding arbitration. As signatory of the collective bargaining agreement, FSDS owed a duty to FSAE to comply with the terms of the collective bargaining agreement.

In addition to the above stated relief, FSAE sought declaratory relief to the effect of a judicial determination that employees employed pursuant to 20 U.S.C. § 241 were in an "other personnel system" as that phrase is used in 5 U.S.C. § 7121. While this type of statutory interpretation would normally evolve from the agency tasked with administering the statute, the Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA), they have held that the same statute, 5 U.S.C. § 7121, precludes them from hearing appeals from arbitrator's decisions where the matter before the arbitrator was "similar to those covered under sections 4303 [a performance based adverse action] and 7512 [a 'for cause' based adverse action] of this title which arise under other personnel systems[.]" 5 U.S.C. § 7121(f). Because Ms. Johnson's adverse personnel action was a "for cause" action and Petitioner maintains that they operate under an "other personnel system," appeal to the FLRA was not available.

CONCLUSION

If arbitrators are permitted to refuse to address the merits of a grievance and the District Courts lack subject matter jurisdiction over this type of judicial complaint, Petitioner and its members will have no means of enforcing their collective bargaining rights provided under Chapter 71 of Title 5, U.S. Code. The Civil Service Reform Act is silent on the issue of who is to determine when a group of employees is in an other personnel system and what review is provided in the event there is an error in this determination. Employees in an other personnel system, deprived of rights provided under chapter 71 of Title 5, have no where else to turn but to the District Court for a legal ruling on their status. Congress clearly did not contemplate this situation and did not address it when passing the CSRA. Therefore, the federal question contained in the complaint was proper before the District Court.

For the reasons stated, the petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

MR. JOSEPH A. WESTON, Arbitrator, and FORT STEWART DEPENDENTS SCHOOLS DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE DOMESTIC DEPENDENT ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY SCHOOLS, Defendant.	)

ORDER AND MEMORANDUM

Before the Court is the federal defendants' motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(1). For the reasons set forth below, defendants' motion is granted.

FACTS

Plaintiff Fort Stewart Association of Educators ("FSAE") is the exclusive bargaining representative for all professional and non-professional employees of defendants Fort Stewart Dependents Schools, Department of Defense Domestic Dependent and Elementary Schools ("FSDS"). FSAE negotiated a collective bargaining agreement with FSDS that included a provision for resolving disputes through a grievance procedure and arbitration.

Judith Johnson was employed as a non-preference eligible excepted service ("NEES") employee pursuant to 20 U.S.C. §241 with FSDS in 1992. She worked as an art teacher at FSDS during 1992 and 1993. On August 25, 1993, she was removed from her teaching responsibilities and assigned to the copy room. On September 6, 1993, FSAE filed a grievance on Ms. Johnson's behalf concerning this reassignment. On September 27, 1993, FSDS issued a written notice of termination to Ms. Johnson effective September 29, 1993. FSAE filed a second grievance on Johnson's behalf contesting the termination. FSAE and FSDS failed to resolve the grievances through the grievance procedure and they submitted the disputes to arbitrator Joseph Weston.

Arbitrator Weston conducted an arbitration hearing on June 13 and 14, 1994. Joseph Weston issued his opinion denying the grievances on August 8, 1994. He denied the grievance on the ground that Johnson was not entitled to arbitration because she is a NEES employee of the government, employed pursuant to 20 U.S.C. §241. FSAE brought the current action seeking a declaratory judgement that the provisions of the collective bargaining agreement are enforceable and order directing arbitrator Weston to decide the dispute on the merits. Specifically, FSAE contends that Ms. Johnson was employed under an "other personnel system" as set out in 5 U.S.C. § 7121(e) and (f) and, therefore, entitled to arbitration of the disputes.

DISCUSSION

Plaintiff bases subject matter jurisdiction on 5 U.S.C. Chapter 71, 28 U.S.C. §1331 and 28 U.S.C. §1361. FSDS contends that the Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction because Johnson was not employed under an other personnel system, because Johnson is not entitled to the protection of the provisions listed in 20 U.S.C. §241(a), and because Johnson is a probationary NEES employee. Defendants further contend that jurisdiction is not proper pursuant to the mandamus provision, 28 U.S.C. §1361, because the statute is not an independent grant of subject matter jurisdiction and because the arbitrator is not an officer or employee of the United States.[1]

Plaintiff contends that the subject matter jurisdiction is appropriate in the district court because review is provided under general federal question jurisdiction or not at all. This assertion requires an examination of the statutory scheme set out in the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 ("CSRA"), Pub.L. No. 95-454, 92 Stat 1111 (codified as amended in scattered sections

[1] Defendants' argument that jurisdiction is inappropriate under Karahalios v. National Federation of Federal Employees, 489 U.S. 527 (1989) and related cases, is inapposite to the present dispute since it concerns unfair labor practices brought before the Federal Labor Relations Authority. This argument will not be addressed by the Court.

of 5 U.S.C.). The CSRA provides a detailed procedure for reviewing adverse personnel actions taken against federal employees. United States v. Fausto, 484 U.S. 439, 443 (1988). The CSRA divides employees into the three major categories of senior executive service, competitive service and eligible excepted service. Department of the Treasury v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 873 F.2d 1467, 1468 (D.C.Cir. 1989). cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1055 and 493 U.S. 1056 (1990). Preference status is given to those eligible in the excepted service who are veterans or certain close relatives of veterans. 5 U.S.C. §2108 (1977 & Supp. 1994).

Chapter 71 of Title 5 provides for representation of federal employees by labor organizations. Section 7121 (1980) provides for resolution of employee disputes through a negotiated grievance procedure that includes questions of arbitrability. Section 7121(e)(1) provides that matters covered under §§4303 and 7512 which are part of a negotiated grievance procedure can either be resolved through the grievance procedure or brought in front of the Merit Systems Protection Board ("Board"). Section 4303 (1994) covers a reduction in grade or removal for unacceptable performance. Section 7512 (1980) covers major adverse actions taken against an employee, including removal. For employees employed pursuant to other personnel systems, actions similar to those outlined in §§4303 and 7512 can either be resolved through the negotiated grievance procedure or any applicable appellant procedures. The applicable appellant procedures are the agency's own personnel regulations. Nieuwdorp v. Library of Congress, 872 F.2d 1000, 1002 (Fed.Cir. 1989).

Section 7121(f) provides that, if arbitration is pursued under §§4303 and 7512, judicial review is available through the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit in the same manner as if the dispute had been taken before the Board. For employees employed pursuant to an other personnel system, judicial review is available in the same manner as matters raised under applicable appellant procedures. Section 7122(a)(1980) provides for review of an arbitrator's award by the FLRA for matters other than the ones covered in §7121(f).

In this case, Johnson is not an employee for purposes of §7512. NEES employees employed less than 2 years in the same or a similar position, are not employees governed by Chapter 75 of the CSRA. 5 U.S.C. §7511(a)(1)(C)(Supp. 1994). Moreover, because Johnson was hired pursuant to 20 U.S.C. §241 (1994), certain sections of the CSRA, including §§4303 and 7512, are not applicable to her.[2] Therefore, if Johnson was employed under the main civil service system, she has no statutory right to arbitrate a dispute over her removal.

[2] The Court recognizes that the language excluding personnel appointed under 20 U.S.C. §241 from certain protective provisions of the CSRA is not mandatory. Plaintiff has offered no evidence or argument that Ms. Johnson was given these protections, however, and the Court presumes that she was not. See Todd v. Department of Defense, 63 M.S.P.R. 4, 7 (1994).

Department of Treasury, 873 F.2d at 1469-72. If Johnson was a NEES employee employed pursuant to an other personnel system, then she may have been entitled to arbitration but she has no statutory right under the CSRA to judicial review of that decision. See id. at 1472 (stating that while NEES employees employed under other personnel systems may negotiate for grievance procedures they have no statutory right of appeal). Therefore, judicial review is not provided by the CSRA regardless of whether Johnson was employed with the main civil service system or under an other personnel system. Indeed, plaintiff has not contended that Johnson is entitled to review under the statutory provisions of the CSRA.

Plaintiff does contend that, because there is no indication of congressional intent to preclude judicial review, review must be had in the district court. Plaintiff cites no authority for this proposition, however. Indeed, this proposition was directly refuted by the Supreme Court in United States v. Fausto, 484 U.S. 439 (1988). In Fausto, the Court held that a NEES employee was precluded from seeking judicial review not provided for in the CSRA. In so doing, the Court held that the presumption of judicial review was overcome by the statutory scheme as a whole. Id. at 452. Likewise, in this case, because there is no judicial review for a NEES employee like Ms. Johnson provided for in the CSRA, there is no judicial review available. The Eleventh Circuit has also recognized that a NEES employee does not have a right to non-statutory judicial review and that the court lacks jurisdiction to decide such an action. Royals v. Tisch, 864 F.2d 1565 (11th Cir. 1989).

Accordingly, this Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction to review the decision of the arbitrator in this case.

CONCLUSION

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's complaint for lack of subject matter jurisdiction be and is granted. The Clerk of Court is directed to close this case.
